Feeder: Fender amplifier

1. Listen and use your Fender amplifier as if you were recording in a studio. The microphone will help you to achieve a natural sound. A microphone can be placed near the speaker or near the volume control. Keep the microphone as close to your face as possible.

2. Keep the microphone as far from the sound as possible.

3. Acoustic conditions vary in each room. Acoustic conditions that are most important:
   - Use a high-quality unidirectional microphone.
   - Use a microphone that is balanced in all directions.
   - Listen to the sound level of the microphone.
   - Use a microphone that is balanced in all directions.
   - Keep the microphone as close to your face as possible.

4. Tone control settings are most important.

- Using your Fender Amplifier as a Public Address System

A public address system is used in combination with a microphone and a good microphone and when proper audio tech.

Your Fender amplifier makes an excellent Public Address System.

- Overemphasized, preferably a dynamic, unidirectional microphone is used.
- The use of a high-quality microphone cannot be ignored.
